Japanese Studies Online is a new publishing medium for articles about contemporary Japan from any discipline. Articles should be between 1,500 words and 6,000 words (that is less than journal length). They should contain the results of original research and ideally should be on topics of wide rather than specialist interest.

Authors wishing to contribute articles should email these to the Managing Editor at: japaninstitute@anu.edu.au

Articles published in this journal can be counted towards Australian Higher Education Research Data Collection (HERDC) points operated by the Department of Innovation, Industry, Science and Research (DIISR).

Articles proposed for publication will be submitted for independent comment under a double blind referee procedure before publication will be decided.

This journal observes the Creative Commons guidelines on downloading